

Students supporting students in the journey from college to university

“Partnership implies an equal relationship between two or more bodies working together towards a common purpose, respecting the different skills, knowledge, experience and capability that each party brings to the table....”

The joint work between ELRAH and sparqs has two broad aims:

- To ensure that the student voice has a place in decisions made about articulation at operational level
- To facilitate better student engagement across transition boundaries

Current activity:

- We have established a network of students/elected representatives
- We have created a student position on the ELRAH Operational group
- Work is underway towards producing a transitions toolkit
- A student-led workshop will take place at the QAA International Enhancement Themes conference in June based upon the ideas behind this work

Challenges and benefits

Discussion

Benefits:

To institutions (group 1)

To students (group 2)

Challenges:

For institutions (group 3)

For students (group 4)

Key messages from group feedback

